A COLLECTION OF PROOFS AND ESSAYS, THE PROPERTY OF A GENTLEMAN (Part II)

The first part of this property was sold in these rooms on 1 October 2009.

The Bank Restriction Act of 1797 allowed the Bank of England to issue low denomination notes for One and Two Pounds for the first time. One consequence of this was a rapid increase in the number of forged notes in circulation. In 1807 3,016 One Pound and 1,123 Two Pound forgeries were presented at the bank. The over-riding fear was not financial, but the fact that mere possession of a forged note could result in transportation or even the death penalty. The committee of the Treasury, including the governor, deputy governor and several senior directors of the Bank of England, looked for consultation on this issue between May 1797 and February 1802, but the problems became more serious and led to a Royal Commission of Inquiry in 1817. The Society of Arts stepped in to widen the debate and welcomed new designs, including one from Thomas Ranson which had been rejected by the bank.

The basic requirement was that any design could not be successfully copied by the engravers working for the bank. Most submissions failed this test, but even those that did not were never adopted with the bank making only minor modifications to its note issue.

- Provenance:* From the wreck of SS Politician, an 8,000-ton freighter outbound from Liverpool for Kingston and New Orleans, which sank in a gale near the island of Eriskay, Outer Hebrides, on 5 February 1941. The infamy of the wreck was assured by the islanders' salvage of the vessel's cargo of Scotch malt whisky, later recreated in Compton Mackenzie's 1947 novel Whisky Galore and the subsequent film. The vessel also contained almost 290,000 ten-shilling notes, of which over three-quarters were recovered by the salvage company and the police and subsequently destroyed
